THE HERALD.

IT IS UP TO US TO HUSTLE.

Wolfe county has so far not subscribed a cent toward Kentucky's representation at the World's Fair. What's the matter with Wolfe county? Ordinarily we would answer this question with "She's all right," and she generally is, but there is one proposition on which she is standing in her own light. We refer to the enterprise placed on foot by the Kentucky Exhibit Association for a Kentucky Building and full display of the State's products and resources at the World's Fair in St. Louis next year, an enterprise that has the endorsement and backing of a majority of the best communities in the State, an enterprise that has not developed one iota of opposition from any source.

Had the last Legislature made an appropriation of $100,000 for Kentucky's representation at this exposition, our county would have paid of that amount $150. Up to this time she has not contributed one cent toward the movement that must result in the best advertisement ever given this commonwealth, the richest in every way in the union.

Why this lack of interest? Certainly it cannot be said of our county that her people are not progressive and do not want to join hands with others in giving the State the representation she must have at this greatest of all World's Fairs if she is to keep step with the march of the Twentieth Century Prosperity. Certainly our people are aware that the Kentucky Exhibit Association has no element of selfishness in its make-up, for its members are giving freely of their time and money to make the undertaking a success, there being no salaried commissioners as would have been the case under a legislative appropriation. Certainly our people realize that no county in the State has more to show than Wolfe.

Well, whatever this seeming indifference, it is high time we were throwing it off. Let's delay no longer. Kentucky is going to be represented at the exposition. The movement to this end has passed its wobbly stage. It is not enough, though, to be represented; Kentucky deserves to be and should be creditably represented.

Won't our citizens see to it that she is? Let's begin now subscribing to the fund. THE HERALD has devoted columns upon columns of space to the cause of State development. There is certainly no one who would confess himself so ignorant as to not be fully acquainted with this worthy effort to lift the State to a proud eminence.

Among the counties already represented on the subscription books of the Kentucky Exhibit Association are Ballard, Barren, Bell, Boone, Boyd, Boyle, Breckinridge, Campbell, Carroll, Clark, Crittenden, Fayette, Franklin, Grant, Henderson, Hopkins, Hickman, Jefferson, Jessamine, Johnson, Kenton, Laurel, Lawrence, Livingston, Lyon, McCracken, Madison, Marion, Mason, Montgomery, Muhlenberg, Nicholas, Spencer, Trigg, Union, Warren, Whitley. Few of these counties have contributed sums equal to their apportionment under a State appropriation, but their citizens are at work and they will make a good showing. As we say in the headlines, "It's up to us," and no mistake. The association has sent us a number of subscription blanks and we will receive contributions to the fund at our office until further notice.

This is a free country and every citizen and every newspaper man in the State, the United States, the Philippines, Hawaii, Cuba, Porto Rico and the world at large can say all they want to about the Breathitt business. But the remarks that will go in this paper about the affairs up there will be like unto these few lines:

Having gone through one war with safety, we don't care to engage in another. Besides, we opine that there is a whole lot of difference between a brave man and a fool, and we know that one live editor, be he ever so timid, is worth a dozen dead ones. And we feel very much like the man who, attempting to settle a family row, had both the man and woman lambaste him. That is also a family affair, and they can fight it out among themselves.

The Eminent Kidney and Bladder Specialist.

The Discoverer of Swamp-Root at Work in His Laboratory.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the vital organs, or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell. Then the richness of the blood—the albumen—leaks out and the sufferer has Bright's Disease, the worst form of kidney trouble. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the new discovery is the true specific for kidney, bladder and urinary troubles. It has cured thousands of apparently hopeless cases, after all other efforts have failed. At drug stores in fifty-cent and dollar sizes. A sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling about Swamp-Root and its wonderful cures. Address: Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and mention this paper.

HIS WIFE ELIZABETH

By HARRIET CARYL COX.

"It is dreadful curious how Jake Lemington ever got married a second time, seeing how fond he was of his first wife and taking on so, as if nobody ever lost a wife before." Mrs. Harwood remarked, as the chaise with Jake and his wife passed them on the road. Both looked up and smiled.

"Not that there's anything against the woman, of course. I wouldn't want you to think that for one instant. But," she added hastily, her eyes on the distant vehicle.

"Marjory Prouty is as likely a woman as there is anywhere. In these parts, you couldn't ask me one to be any better to those children than Marjory is. She's a first-rate worker and's took hold there and made things most as neat as Elizabeth did. Only of course it can't be the same to me." She sighed somewhat ruefully.

"You was some relation to the first wife, wasn't you?" her companion queried sympathetically. "Seems to me I kind of recollect something of the kind."

"She was my own cousin on my mother's side," Mrs. Harwood answered. "I'm sure, and there weren't many like her in this world. If I do say it, Jake and she took to each other when she was a visiting me, and it was a dreadful kind of exciting to watch 'em, and wonder how things were going. Em and I used to bet on when he'd speak up enough to ask her, and we each of us came one day and said it on Sunday night, because he always came then, but I said he'd get most to the point then and finally do it Tuesday night at the sing, but he didn't. He came round Sunday night, I said I was nearest right 'cause 'twas the result of Sunday night, and Em said she was, because he wanted to show off at the sing how he'd got her. It was a dreadful foolish of us, of course, but we were young then, and folks do lots of foolish things then."

"Some people don't never grow old then," her companion remarked dryly. "If being foolish is confined to young folks."

"I know," Mrs. Harwood rejoined. "But as I was saying, Elizabeth and Jake were dreadful fond of each other, and it got to be a real laughing matter among us, how Elizabeth did this, and Elizabeth did that, and to one could make bread just like Elizabeth. But then, that's just the way. Sometimes it seems as if the more a man thought of his first wife, the sooner he gets a second. You'd think 'twould be just the other way, wouldn't you? Mr. John always said that when a man marries like that, it's like a man when he's invested some money and come out rich. He's crazy as to get again, and so when he's had such good luck with his first wife, it comes natural, being so lonesome, to get married again. But if a man hasn't been so fortunate, it takes him a longer time before he ventures again; and maybe he doesn't at all, or if he does 'tis 'cause he hopes to have her back next time. I'm sure I don't know, but I do know one thing, I wouldn't thank my husband to go and marry any woman when I'm dead and gone."

"I don't 'pose you would," Mrs. Bates concurred, as she turned into her own gate. "Most of us don't like to think what'll happen when we're dead and gone, but I don't think it's a Christian feeling to want your husband to be lonesome, and the children growing up without a woman to look after them, so long as your man's been faithful and true while you're living. You can't have him when you're dead, anyway, and it's selfish according to my mind. I'm sure I'd want Fred to be happy when I wasn't here to make him so."

"Folks are different," Mrs. Harwood said her mouth decidedly. "But then, I'll say this of Jake, he always speaks most high of Elizabeth even now, and Marjory has come to think that there wasn't nobody in all the world like her, and I guess it keeps her kinder on the alert to do things as well as Elizabeth did. It must be kind of galling to think he's always comparing one with 't'other. But then, that was her lookout when she married him. She was old enough to know what she was about, and I must say she acts real Christian-like about it. Don't never seem to feel to resentment because he thinks so much of Elizabeth and has her relatives around so much. Thanking and that like, and she's dreadful particular 'bout the children remembering their mother, and Decoration day there don't nobody have quite as nice a looking grave as Elizabeth. It's just piled up with the greatest lot of wreaths and crosses you ever did see, and Marjory makes 'em all. But then, as I was saying, I should think 'twould be kind of galling, just the same."

"I suppose there are lots of galling things in this world," Mrs. Bates remarked concisely, and she bade her neighbor good-by and entered her own house.

Unmindful of her neighbor's gossip, Jake and his wife rode slowly along the dusty road, turning off at the right, just beyond the bridge, and entering the well-trodden lane that led to the little cemetery on the hill. This they always did coming home from church.

"It is real sort of peaceful here, isn't it?" Marjory remarked as she sprang from the chaise with the help of his proffered hand. "Somehow it always seems so nice here with the breeze blowing fresh from the woods and the sky smiling above, the flowers growing all about and the birds hopping around and singing, that it can't be so very hard to be dead after all."

Jake started visibly. "You don't never wish you was dead, do you?" he demanded almost fiercely, dropping some loose flowers in his astonishment. "You ain't sick, be you, Marjory?" He came close to her with a look of anxiety on his distressed face.

She laughed easily. "I wasn't never better in my life, Jake," she cried, stooping to pick up the fallen flowers and then walking on to the grave with its white headstone marked "Wife." "I hadn't ought to have scared you so. Poor Jake, you're laid trouble enough. I wouldn't add anything to it for anything in this whole world." She gave him an affectionate glance.

It was only thinking that seeing Elizabeth dead, that the Lord saw fit to take her away, and if she knows anything about it, she ought to be as well satisfied here as anywhere, with you and the children coming to see her regular."

"You're too," he broke in. "You've come when I wouldn't, you know you have, Marjory."

"I don't count," she answered, simply. "I don't know as she'd be very glad to see me, seeing I've kind of taken her place. Not really taken it, of course, nobody could do that." She said this softly, as she laid the flowers on the grave. "And of course I shouldn't ever think of trying. But it was right some one should come to the house and look after things. I'm sure she wouldn't want things neglected. And I've tried to do my best."

"I know," Mrs. Harwood rejoined. "But as I was saying, Elizabeth and Jake were dreadful fond of each other, and it got to be a real laughing matter among us, how Elizabeth did this, and Elizabeth did that, and to one could make bread just like Elizabeth. But then, that's just the way. Sometimes it seems as if the more a man thought of his first wife, the sooner he gets a second. You'd think 'twould be just the other way, wouldn't you? "I don't think you understand," he continued, looking just her down and so gravely. "And I reckon it's my fault, too. I—I'm dreadful fond of you, Marjory. He was close beside her now."

"I've been dreadful fond of you right along," he went on. "And I've told you so, lots of times, only you never seemed to think I meant it very much. You was thinking of Elizabeth. But I did. You're an awful good woman, Marjory, and—and I love you just the same as I love Elizabeth."

He took her hand in his. "I love you just as much as I ever did her," he whispered, softly. "Prairie Farmer Home Magazine."

Cairo, Ill., was an important naval station during the civil war. It was the rendezvous of the fleet of iron-clads built by Capt. Foote at the beginning of the war. As a naval station it was first commanded by Commander John Rodgers, who was relieved by Admiral Foote, then ranking as flag officer, on September 12, 1861. At Cairo the sailors for the Mississippi river fleet were mobilized and trained, many of them living in wharf boats along the levee. From there the federal troops that took part in the battles of Belmont and Fort Henry were transported by transports. Admiral Foote left Cairo to participate in the Fort Henry campaign on February 2, 1862, taking with him four of the iron-clad boats built by Capt. Foote and three wooden gunboats. The expedition resulted in the surrender of Fort Henry to Admiral Foote on February 6.

A benefit concert for two murderers, whose guilt was proved, but whose friends wanted funds for a last appeal, was recently given at Brisbane, Queensland. After the concert the father, brother and sister of the murderers (who were brothers) appeared on the stage and were applauded.

The old Calvert home, at Mount Airy, Md., which for more than two centuries has sheltered the descendants of the first Lord Baltimore, was offered at public auction recently, but was withdrawn from sale because only half of its actual value was bid. It is rumored that Secretary of State Hay will be among the bidders when the property shall be offered again. The mansion was built in 1660, and was primarily used for the Calverts as a shooting box, but was later enlarged, renovated and made the permanent home of the family.

GENIUS IN CONVICT GARB.

Many Useful Inventions Are the Work of Criminals in Different Prisons.

It not infrequently happens that men imprisoned behind iron bars in our prisons give to the world inventions whose value it would be difficult to estimate, says the Chicago Chronicle. One of the most important of recent minor inventions is credited to the ingenuity of a convict in the New Jersey state prison—Charles Filer. It is a blind lockstitch sewing machine which will enable one operator to do the work of many. The device was invented by Filer while he was at work in the clothing shop of the prison. Outside capital was interested in the machine and Filer secured as his reward a cash payment of $3,000, a block of stock, his parole and the promise of a position with the company at a good salary.

Other convicts have figured in patent office reports as inventors. One whose name is recalled was Melchior Farkner, who, while confined in a Hungarian penitentiary in 1892, devised a mechanism for giving a man a clean shave in 25 seconds. The cable report asserted that the governor of the penitentiary had tested the machine and declared it a success, but what came of it is unknown.

A convict of a mechanical turn of mind is apt to find his confinement and his isolation from deterring influences most helpful in enabling him to acquire greater facility. The exhibition by the prison association of articles made by convicts contained specimens of high-class work done behind the prison bars. Among them were an elaborate iron door, richly carved oak staircase, chairs, desks, cabinets, iron bedsteads, plaster casts, etc. A piece of cloth woven at Auburn came in for the highest praise. Richard Barker, a life convict at Auburn, made a box out of 14,796 separate pieces of wood which was a marvel of skillful cabinet work. It required a glass to see where the different fragments of wood were joined together. In the year 1885 the goods manufactured by the convicts of the state of New York were valued at $6,230,320.

HOW GOLD NUGGETS GROW.

Observation Shows They Increase in Weight with the Lapse of Years.

Gold in its natural state, like many other products of the earth, is an article of development. What its original elements are is still a matter of some speculation, but the fact has been demonstrated that a nugget of the precious metal left in its original environment will gradually though slowly increase in weight. The Indian still stands with one foot in the bottom of the boat, the other resting on the curved top of the bow. He surely knew he would be killed, but he never moved.

"A little puff of smoke and fire burst from the muzzle of the miner's rifle and in an instant the chief's hands fell to his side. He raised his right arm again and pointed directly before him at the red man sinking head first into the water. The place, and as it drew nearer we could see a red stream coursing down the bronze skin of the warrior. The rifle cracked again, the Indian raised his face to the sky and fell into the water."

Uncle Sam has decided to adopt novel means to encourage the silkworm industry in the United States. It is proposed to distribute to the public silkworm eggs, together with full instructions as to how they may be hatched, the worms fed and developed and at last how the cocoons may be gathered. After taking the beginners through all these stages, the government will buy the cocoons, paying regular market prices for them. All this is to be done in order to stimulate interest in the business, in the hope of establishing it as an industry. Those who apply to the department of agriculture for silkworm eggs will be furnished with about one-sixteenth of an ounce of them, provided the officials here are convinced that a serious attempt to hatch the eggs is to be made, says a Washington special to the Brooklyn Eagle.

The allotment of one-sixteenth of an ounce may seem like a very small start, but when it is known that it takes about 40,000 eggs to weigh a single ounce, it will be seen that Uncle Sam is generous enough in his distribution. Already much interest has been created in this subject, and applications for eggs are coming in at the rate of four or five a day. The government recently bought 60 ounces of the finest grade of silkworm eggs in France and Italy, and is prepared to buy more when it becomes apparent that the present supply will be exhausted. Negotiations are now under way for the importing of two reeler, as persons are called who are versed in the art of removing the silk from cocoons and transferring it to reels. The necessary machinery has been bought, and the manufacture of raw silk will be in full blast at the department in the fall, when the worms have spun the silk. It is proposed to sell the product to silk manufacturers.

Prof. L. O. Howard, the entomologist of the department of agriculture, has charge of this work, and he says the climate and other conditions on Long Island were well adapted to silkworm culture. The place chosen for rearing the worms should be relatively high, and not exposed to malaria or bad odors, and mulberry trees should grow around it. Any room that can be properly heated and ventilated will answer the purpose. Sixty-five days usually complete the cycle of existence of the silkworm, covering the hatching of the eggs, the growth of the worm, the spinning of its covering, called the cocoon; the development of the chrysalis into the moth, the laying of eggs by the mother moth and then its peaceful death. Prof. Howard describes the whole process in a little bulletin that he has issued, and it would appear from it that silkworm culture can be carried on at home in any place where mulberry leaves may be obtained. The development of the worm from the egg to the moth is very rapid. The new-born insect eats day and night, at all hours, except when asleep, and in about 30 days grows 14,000 times larger than it was at birth.

The West a Condition.
The west, somehow, has come to be a condition rather than a place. After days in a luxurious train, the casual traveler finds himself in the cities of the Pacific with the feeling that here are not the differences, the strangeness, the westernness that he had expected. The real west which he has pictured so fondly, the free, the hearty, the fascinating, seems in some degree to have escaped him. And presently he discovers that the condition which is called western is singularly misplaced in the west; that the most western of American cities is not Portland or Seattle, but Butte City, 600 miles to the east of the coast—Ray Stannard Baker's, "The Great Northwest," in Century.

Cotton-Growing in Turkestan.
Russia for 15 years has encouraged the cultivation of cotton in Turkestan, and she has succeeded. In 1899 the cotton crop was 70,000 bales, while the estimated production for 1903 will be 204,000 bales.—N. Y. Sun.

THE RED MAN'S COURAGE.

An Argument's Account of an Indian's Foolish But Pathetic Show of Bravery.

"They can talk all they please about the cowardice and treachery of Indians, but let me say that they are the gamest fellows that ever breathed," said an Argonaut the other day, according to a western exchange. "After they had been whipped and driven from plain to mountain range time and again, of course they became treacherous, but before they learned of the white man's tactics they were an unflinching foe."

"The prettiest sight I ever saw was during a fight a lot of us miners had with a band of Indians in Montana in the early '30s. We had been prospecting along the Yellowstone and had not found any tempting gold-bearing gravel, so we started to go about a hundred miles farther down the river. We hadn't gone far before we ran into a band of hostile Indians. From the first we knew there was a fight coming, but we pushed on."

"Two days' travel brought us into the center of their rather shifting territory and we knew that we were in for it. The redskins were camped across the river, but we knew there were others in the woods all about us. We built a raft and pushed out to a brush-covered sandbar to get out of the way. Indians generally make an attack in the night or early morning, but this band chose the time of sunset to strike at us. They piled in their rude canoes and floated down stream directly toward our camp on the bar, and you never saw a more fearless set of red demons in your life."

"Standing erect in the bow of the front canoe was the chief. He looked like a tall bronze statue. The light of the low-sinking sun fell upon him, lighting up his face, arms and bare chest. He was the noblest looking creature my eyes ever rested upon. I knew we had to kill him, but I was touched with pity at the thought. I couldn't raise my rifle to do it, but one of the boys did. The boat drew nearer. The Indian still stood with one foot in the bottom of the boat, the other resting on the curved top of the bow. He surely knew he would be killed, but he never moved."

"A little puff of smoke and fire burst from the muzzle of the miner's rifle and in an instant the chief's hands fell to his side. He raised his right arm again and pointed directly before him at the red man sinking head first into the water. The place, and as it drew nearer we could see a red stream coursing down the bronze skin of the warrior. The rifle cracked again, the Indian raised his face to the sky and fell into the water."

"It was a hard fight to drive the rest of the band away, and we lost several of our men in doing it. It was a hard fight, but it was worth while to me for the picture of the great nameless chief has always remained with me. He gave me the grandest exhibition of courage I have ever seen, and I have respected the red man ever since."

TO ENCOURAGE SILK-GROWING.

CONGRESSMAN WILBER STAYS

"Pe-ru-na is All You Claim For It"

Congressman D. F. Wilber, of Oneonta, N. Y., writes: The Per-na Medicine Co., Columbus, Ohio:

Gentlemen:—Persuaded by a friend I have tried your remedy and I have almost fully recovered after the use of a few bottles. I am fully convinced that Per-na is all you claim for it, and I cheerfully recommend your medicine to all who are afflicted with catarrhal trouble."—David F. Wilber.

Per-na Preventive and Cure for Colds.
Mr. C. F. Given, Sussex, N. B., Vice President of "The Pastime Boating Club," writes:

"Whenever the cold weather sets in I have for years past been very sure to catch a severe cold which was hard to throw off, and which would leave after-effects on my constitution the most of the winter."

"Last winter I was advised to try Per-na, and within five days the cold was broken up and in five days more I was a well man. I recommended it to several of my friends and all speak the highest praise for it. There is nothing like Per-na for catarrhal affections. It is well high in fallible as a cure, and I gladly endorse it."—C. F. Given.

FOUND HIM OUT.

Thought He Had the Grocer Thrown Off the Track, But Was Mistaken.

"Mind, I was in a strange town dealing with a strange man, and I tried not to act strange, and still the fellow found me out," said the newly married man, according to the New York Times. "My intended wife and I had a sentiment about spending our wedding night in our own home. The honeymoon trip was to begin till the following morning. That required laying in a stock of provisions for breakfast."

"On the morning of the wedding day I called at the nearest grocery store and ordered a supply. There was butter and salt and eggs and sugar and—well, every body knows the string! Understand, I did everything a bridegroom is not expected to do to throw the fellow off the track. I ordered things off-hand, not from a fool slip of paper, but from memory. I talked to the pretty cashier and ate an apple out of a barrel as if I had been born in the place, like the store cat. Everything conceivable I did, and thought I had the grocer completely fooled when, on handing me the packages, he said:

"Well, sir, I hope you'll give us your trade when you get settled."

Cholly—Charming widow, isn't she? They say she is to marry again.

A Little Early Riser

Now and then, at bedtime will cure constipation, biliousness and liver troubles. DeWitt's Little Early Riser are the famous little pills that cure by arousing the secretions, moving the bowels gently, yet effectively, and giving such tone and strength to the glands of the stomach and liver that the cause of the trouble is removed entirely, and if their use is continued for a few days, there will be no return of the complaint.

Gene Focht, representing the Arm and Hammer Soda Co., New York, was here Monday tacking advertisements, distributing red calico caps, and presenting pipe smokers with gutta percha match boxes. This, of course, is a species of advertising, but not nearly as good as newspaper work, and Mr. Focht promised THE HERALD some business later on.

Millard Ritchie, of Maytown, called a few days ago to have some printing done, and in response to an inquiry about the health of his wife, who had inflammatory rheumatism when she removed from our town, he said, "She is very much better, thank you, and was cured by Dr. Shoup's remedies, a stock of which I keep on sale." We don't usually advertise for nothing, but if this item will save some one from suffering, we shall be repaid.

The Wastes of the Body.

Every seven days the blood, muscles, and bones of a man of average size loses two pounds of worn-out tissue. The waste cannot be replenished and the health and strength kept up without perfect digestion. When the stomach and digestive organs fail to perform their functions, the strength left down, health gives way, and disease sets up. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure enables the stomach and digestive organs to digest and assimilate all of the wholesome food that may be eaten into the kind of blood that rebuilds the tissues and protects the health and strength of the mind and body. Kodol cures indigestion, Dyspepsia, and all stomach troubles. It is an ideal spring tonic.

A rooster in this town recently developed such a vicious disposition that he gobbled up every newly hatched chicken he could see. In his onslaught he swallowed a young duck, and Jim Gilley's boys, to whom he belonged, determined to kill him. When they slaughtered him the duckling was still alive, and Miss Mary Ellen Trimble bought it for 10 cents. It is alive and hearty, and notwithstanding its Jonah-like experience, bide fair to quack, quack for many a day.

BONE FOOD

Soft and crooked bones mean bad feeding. Call the disease rickets if you want to. The growing child must eat the right food for growth. Bones must have bone food, blood must have blood food and so on through the list.

Scott's Emulsion is the right treatment for soft bones in children. Little doses every day give the stiffness and shape that healthy bones should have.

Bow legs become straighter, loose joints grow stronger and firmness comes to the soft heads.

Wrong food caused the trouble. Right food will cure it. In thousands of cases Scott's Emulsion has proven to be the right food for soft bones in childhood.

HENRY J. CECIL,
Hazel Green, Ky.

George Dyer, the tonsorial artist of our town, is doing a rushing business each Saturday, and inquiry as to what caused so many to be making the exclamation, "Next!" developed the fact that George had just added a lot of brand new razors to his outfit. If you haven't had him to give you a shave, try him.

An All-The-Year-Round Cottage.

A house that expresses those qualities of comfort characteristic of the "cottage" at the same time possesses such a substantial arrangement as to make it habitable all the year round is described and illustrated in the June Delinestor. Such a dwelling, while having the advantages of a summer cottage is far more of a home, and the one shown is essentially "livable" and homelike. It is a house of moderate cost, attractive in appearance and artistic in furnishing. Home makers can find a wealth of suggestion in the article.

Mrs. Jane Oldfield, mother of George and Boone Oldfield, who is at the home of her son-in-law, Wm. Brewer, of Stillwater, has been quite sick for a week or so past, and her relatives are anxious as to her condition. She is 84 years old, and a general decline is the cause of her illness. George told "our man about town" Monday that he would move her to his home as soon as she was able to withstand the ride.

The greatest nation in the world is the greatest consumer of coffee.

is the standard beverage of every state and territory of the Union. It's pure—that's why.

A certain weekly wakes up its delinquent subscribers in this lively fashion: "It is said that a man who squeezes a dollar never squeezes his wife. A glance at our subscription book leads us to believe that many women in this section are not having their ribs cracked. Come in and settle at home. Show that all's right at home." A glance at our subscription list will show that there are more women around Hazel Green who have not been squeezed in the last two or three years than any other part of the State.

Money we must have, and we want 500 subscribers within the next 30 days. To get them we have cut the price of THE HERALD to 50 cents per year. The Courier-Journal and HERALD will be sent to any address in the United States 12 months for $1.00, the price of each paper, provided you subscribe within 30 days. We can't extend the offer beyond that time, so you had better hustle. Old subscribers can take advantage of this offer by paying up all they now owe, and those who have recently paid $1.00 for THE HERALD can also avail of the opportunity by extending subscription one year.

Wanted.

A man of wide acquaintance and good address to represent in Hazel Green one of the oldest, best, and cheapest accident and health companies in existence. Five hundred dollars in case of death, six dollars per week in case of accident, and six dollars per week in case of sickness from disease, also perfect indemnification free. For all this protection the combined cost is only $2.00 per year. Everybody buys. Big commission. Write at once to Smith & Pharis, State Managers, Room 5, Merrick Lodge Building, Lexington, Ky. 2t

The recent improvements at Swango Springs indicate that Mr. Rittenhouse intends to have an up-to-date resort, and it now looks like he will be able to take care of a good many people this season. He has built a handsome and substantial stone spring house which is cemented throughout and will prevent the surface water from mixing with the mineral water of the spring. He has completed a 14-room cottage, or at least a few days since ordered furniture for 14 rooms, and with the accommodations he can thus afford, he will open up the season. Meantime he will go ahead with his building, and by the middle of the summer will have room for double the number of guests he can now entertain. Time and space this week preclude the publication of a more extended notice, but next week we hope to give our readers a detailed description.

Wm. McCarty, sentenced to be hung at Lexington for murdering his wife, escaped the gallows by going the morphine route on last Friday morning.
